Design Manifesto

ALISHA HADLEY

Design must have practical application (bearing in mind that beauty, joy, and inspiration are as pragmatic as the utilitarian, in that all are necessary for flourishing).

Design must be human-centric, whether it is furthering human interests, mitigating human impacts, or resolving human problems.

Design must use gifts, talents, interests, and contextual information, yet conserve and protect resources and interests.

Design must strive for balance and harmony, both in product and processes.
